INTRODUCTION

The beauties of the depths of the underground world fascinate amateurs and professionals. For passionate explores, the most beautiful caves are the deepest, longest and most beautiful to navigate, while those who are more inclined to sightseeing and photographing cave scenes are more attracted to caves rich in decorations.

Speleology and tourism have long been cooperating on a social and scientific level. As essential places to visit, caves influence economic conditions in many countries, both locally and regionally. This fact indicates the value of the development of speleotourism and represent some of the main geological sites in geotourism.
